

Excellent! That's the most critical part of the setup done. Seeing that output means your IDE, Maven, and the basic project structure are all working together correctly.

Now, let's make the application actually do something. We will build out the command-line interface (cli) so our app can accept file names as arguments.